

Only Four Students Show Up for Information

CIA Recruiting Flops at Harvard

A Central Intelligence Agency Lawrence Stevens, a Harvard accuracy to it, but that isn't the recruitment program at Harvard recruiting officer, said Harvard main reason." University was stopped recently does not turn the name of Stevens said the call-off of the because of a lack of interest on interested students over to the CIA recruiting was the first time the part of Harvard students. CIA. He said the name and such an action by the CIA has

James W. Gurll, chief recruiter address of the agency's recruiter happened at Harvard. However, fir the CIA in Boston, said he is given to interested students, he added that periodically, re- called off a planned two-day recruitment campaign at Har- and that the initiative is theirs. cruited from other companies, vard after only four students showed interest in the agency's programs. Asked about one report that the who have not received sufficient interest, will call off their drives.

He said he often does this if the fear of student demonstrations, Gurll said he anticipates that number of students at a college, such as those at Columbia Uni- the recruitment campaign will who sign up, is not sufficient to versity last week, Gurll first continue as before in future warrant spending time on a said, "There's nothing to it." years, providing that Harvard students show more interest than campus. He later said there is "some they did this spring."

BOSTON HERALD - MARCH 1, 1967